Superintendent of Senate Stationery Room Tells of Meeting of Lincoln and Grant.

Fifty-one years a Sunday school work er in the Temple Baptist school. Fifty-two years as an employe of the United States Senate, where he now is superintendent of the stationery room. That is the record of Charles N. Richards, one of the city's veteran Sunday chool workers, whose memory extends to the days of Salmon P. Chase, whose daughter attended Temple Baptist Church, and whose reminiscences of the early civic life and national figures of the Capital are as interesting as his recollections of the historic church where he has worked for more than

For twenty-three years Mr. Richards, whose home is at 101 Massachusetts avenue northwest, was superintendent of the Temple Baptist Sunday school Because of advancing years he quit that work, and organized the Richards' class, a men's class of fifty members, which he taught for a number of years, and which he now attends regularly. His first teacher when he started to Sunday school at the Temple Baptist Church in 1864, was T. U. Walter, architect of the Capitol Dome and of the Patent Office.
